From the Editor

Welcome to the February '99 issue of Double Click everyone. This month's issue is presented via a PowerComputing, PowerTower Pro, as this is my current Mac of choice (I hope to return to a G3 soon).

This month's meeting will feature a presentation on web page design, hosted by Andrew Bodis of IDirect.

It would appear that my work commitments may impede my ability to produce a quality newsletter each month, so it is with this realisation that I humbly ask for volunteers to take on the responsibility. Anyone that is interested can approach me about getting files, images and fonts.

Enjoy the meeting...and don't forget to explore our BBS "The Source". For information, speak to Jim Foster.

See you all next month!

Neil Oates

Apple News

New G3's

Jan. 5, 1999—Apple Computer, Inc. today launched iMacs in five new colours, a new line of Power Macintosh G3s along with three new matching Apple Studio Displays.

"Our new Power Macintosh G3 and new iMacs in five stunning colours give Apple its strongest and most innovative product lineup in years," said Steve Jobs, Apple's interim CEO.

Apple's new line of Power Macintosh G3 systems are the Company's most powerful computers yet—perfect for design professionals, educators or even home users looking for a machine that can handle the latest in 3D games. Replacing the original Power Macintosh G3, which was launched in November 1997 and accounted for more than $3 billion in sales, the new line includes the latest copper-based PowerPC processors running up to 400MHz, ATI RAGE 128 graphics, FireWire, USB and 10/100BASE-T Ethernet. Housed in a stunning translucent minitower enclosure with a revolutionary door that simplifies access and expansion, the new Power Macintosh G3 line starts at an aggressive estimated retail price of Can. $2,399.

Complementing the new systems are three new Apple Studio Displays that deliver outstanding image quality and match the striking design of the new Power Macintosh G3 line.

For the consumer market, the company announced a faster line of new iMacs that come in five dazzling colours—Blueberry, Lime, Tangerine, Strawberry and Grape. The new iMacs feature a faster 266 MHz PowerPC G3 processor, a 6GB hard drive and a new lower estimated retail price of Can. $1,849. iMac has become the best-selling computer in America by addressing real consumer needs not met by traditional PCs, with its simple ten-minute set up and Internet access, and its space and cable-saving design.

Also announced at Macworld today was news that over 1,300 new third party software titles for the Macintosh have been introduced since iMac was first unveiled in May 1998, including an unprecedented number of new games titles arriving on the platform. At the same time, FireWire and USB companies have introduced a significant number of hardware add-ons for the Power Macintosh G3 and iMac.

The new G3's, iMacs and Studio Display Monitors are available now around Toronto.
